What is certification and why is it important?

Certification is a formal process which validates, based on predetermined standards, an individual's qualifications and knowledge to practice in a defined area. The NAFC certification programs are designed to establish the body of knowledge, experience and education that promotes effective delivery of counseling, evaluation, examination, supervision and forensic services to clients, attorneys and the civil/criminal justice system.

Certification creates an identifiable workforce from which the criminal justice system can refer and offers the opportunity to gain recognition from other professionals, court systems, probation/parole departments, corrections, law enforcement and the public for your achievement as a knowledgeable, competent professional in the field of forensic counseling, evaluation, supervision, etc.

Certification can mean a broader range of job opportunities, provide job mobility, and marketability of your skills. Many companies, agencies, courts, etc., may even pay for your certification, training, and renewal fees.
